

What's On The Tube apologises over website malfunction.

In an effort to always continuously improve the service of What's On The Tube today the website <http://whatsonthetube.net> experience some problems relating to viewing individual posts. What's On The Tube would like to provide an unconditional apology for the technical difficulties and ensures that the gremlins responsible for the problems experienced have been placed back inside there cages.

What's On The Tube would also like to apologise for taking the mickey out of television network media releases by releasing this such media release. It was the wrong course of action and will never happen again until the next time a major stuff-up occurs.

This is also a good opportunity to make a note of the new website launched for network ratings and media releases to be published. This can be found by clicking the "ratings" button at the top of the What's On The Tube website, by book marking or subscribing at <http://ratings.whatsonthetube.net> in the usual manner.

Sincerely,

Danny
